Neurite outgrowth is a major event during neural development and is also characteristic of mature neurons in various brain regions. The mechanisms that control neurite outgrowth remain to be elucidated. In this study, we investigated the neurite outgrowth of retinal ganglion cells (RGCs), which are involved in the neuronal circuitry of the visual system. We used the mouse optic nerve cryograft model and found that RGC neurite outgrowth was weak, but increased in a time-dependent manner. Furthermore, we focused on the roles of four RGC-specific molecules, brain-specific angiogenesis inhibitor 1 (BAI1), Fzd8, Sdf1, and syntaxin 3, because they might be involved in RGC neurite outgrowth in the optic nerve cryograft model. BAI1 is a transmembrane glycoprotein with calcium-dependent adhesion activity; Fzd8 is a Wnt receptor of the Frizzled family; Sdf1 is a CXC chem 3da54e8ca3
